The C.J. Saraceno Los Angeles Internship Fund provides financial support and transformational experiences to enterprising, creative Tufts students who would otherwise not have a chance to work in Los Angeles. The internship was established in memory of C.J. Saraceno, A11, a passionate creator who challenged the status quo.

Sponsored by Tufts Film and Media Studies Program.
The CJ Saraceno Los Angeles Internship Fund at Tufts University has been established in memory of CJ Saraceno, A11, a passionate creator who challenged the status quo. This scholarship aims to provide financial support and transformational experiences to enterprising and creative Tufts students who want to dive head on into the Los Angeles media world. This opportunity is funded by the many alumni, friends and family members who cared about CJ as well as those who were inspired by him.

Saraceno graduated in 2011 with a major in political science and minor in communications and media studies. As a young creative force in Los Angeles, he was dedicated to exploring the modern media landscape through new methods of storytelling. He cultivated a blossoming media career evident in the body of work he has left behind – an impactful portfolio of new media accomplishments and ambitious endeavors. This funded internship program challenges students to turn their passions into opportunities, to find their own creative voice and to make a difference in how stories are told. In the spirit of CJ, students who otherwise would not have the financial means to pursue internships in Los Angeles will be given special consideration, as will those who indicate a desire and capacity to make the most of this opportunity.

The following placement has been developed for Tufts students for summer 2019:
